EUROPE AFTER 1815

The map at the left shows Europe as it was at the time the seven Hirschy ancestors left for America in 1835.

In 1815 Napoleon was defeated at the battle of Waterloo. One of the results of the defeat was the transfer of the Canton Neuchâtel (or Mouenbourg) from France to Switzerland as the twenty-first member of the Swiss Confederation. Thus Canton Neuchâtel, the birthplace of the seven Hirschy ancestors, was a part of Switzerland instead of France at the time of their birth. They were all born during the years 1821 to 1830.

On the map Switzerland is the white spot to the right of France. If you look closely you can see the word, Neuchâtel, which is also the name of the chief city of the Canton Neuchâtel.

The voyage to America across the Atlantic Ocean was made by sailing vessel and took 43 days.

SWITZERLAND

Opposite this page is a good map of Switzerland. At the left end of the map you will find a red arrow pointing to the red cross which marks the birthplace of the seven Hirschys who, ninety-five years ago, came to the United States as children with their mother and stepfather.

The farm which was their home is called Bas des Brandt and occupies the very northwest corner of the Canton Neuchâtel. The ancestral home is four or five miles north of the city of La Chaux de Fonds which you can see on the map.

Less than fifty yards west of the farm house is the deep chasm of the river Doubs which forms the dividing line between the Republic of Switzerland and France. See Photograph No. 2 which shows the morning mists hanging over the river Doubs a thousand feet below.

WAYS OF TRAVEL

The map at the left hand end of the opposite page shows the roads and canals open to travel at about the time the seven Hirschy brothers and sisters came to America in 1835. There were no railroads, no telegraph and telephone lines, no frequent deliveries of mail. Graveled and paved roads were undreamed of.

Travel had to be by horseback or by horse or ox team and wagon mostly. The Erie Canal was opened in 1825. It was then the main route from New York City, by way of the Hudson River and Albany, to Buffalo on Lake Erie and thence to port cities on the other Great Lakes westward. Although the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company began to build the first great railway system in 1828, it was not until 1842 that it was possible to travel by rail from Boston to Buffalo.

The wide spread canal system which was developed later at the same time the first railroads were built was not yet in existence. (Also see the next map.) The canal from Toledo, Ohio, to Ft. Wayne, Indiana, used by (III) John Hirschy, (III) Philip Hirschy and (III) Lewis Hirschy in coming from their homes in Ohio to Adams County, Indiana, was not yet open.

Our immigrant ancestors came to a country that was new and unoccupied. Here were great forests of hardwood trees, oak, hickory, elm, ash, beech, maple and many other kinds, ready for the settler's ax. The fertile soil with its rich accumulation of decayed plants had never before been tilled by the hand of man.

With hard work any man could make a home for his family anywhere in this great forest land. Logs could be cut and a house for the family built and a crude shelter for the animals put up. Wild game was plentiful. The first season trees were girdled and corn raised. By the next season a clearing was ready for cultivation. It was a time of neighborly helpfulness. The scattered settlers already at home on their new farms were glad to see new neighbors and helped them get started.

FAMILY BEGINNINGS

(I)Johannes Ullrich Hirschi was a resident of the Canton Neuenburg (also called Neuchatel), Switzerland, all his years. He was married to Mary Losli. About 1829 he died, leaving six children:

- (II)Johannes Ullrich
- (II)Christian
- (II)Mathias
- (II)Maria
- (II)Philip
- (II)Abraham

(II)Johannes Ullrich married but left no children.

(II)Christian, (II)Mathias and (II)Maria never married.

(II)Philip and (II)Abraham alone lived to perpetuate the family name. These six, who constitute the second generation, all lived and died in Switzerland. Of (II)Abraham's descendants nothing is known to us. Therefore, (II)Philip is the central starting point of the generations recorded in this book.

(II)Philip Hirschi was born in Canton Neuenburg (also called Neuchatel), Switzerland, about 1790. By occupation he was a farmer. In about 1820 he married Anna, daughter of Johannes Frey. They lived in La Chaux de Fonds, Canton Neuenburg (also called Neuchatel). See the map of Switzerland. In their religious belief they were Amish Mennonites of which church they were also members. In the winter of 1830, at the age of about forty years, (II)Philip died, leaving a family of seven children:

- (III)John
- (III)Anna
- (III)Philip
- (III)Lewis
- (III)Maryann or Marianna
- (III)Maria
- (III)Rosina

All of these lived to have homes and families of their own. About 1833 (II)Mrs. Philip Hirschi married Christian Horn, who had been a farm laborer at their farm since before the death of her husband.

In March, 1824(?), her father, Johannes ^{Frey} Frey, left for America and settled in Stark County, Ohio. In 1834 he secured a farm near Strassburg (now Maximo), Ohio, and there began to build a house for his daughter, who was now Mrs. Christian Horn, and her family, who came to take possession of it a year later. The same house, though much changed, was still standing in 1893*. Two years after his daughter and her family came to America Mr. Frey died (1837) and now lies buried in the Amish Mennonite cemetery north of Paris, Ohio.

*This has not been investigated since.

THE REGION OF THE JURA---CANTON NEUENBURG ---ANCESTRAL HOMES

Written by (IV) Noah Calvin Hirschy
in 1907 at Doufourstrasse 12,
Bern, Switzerland.

Jura Mountains

The Jura Mountains extend from the Alps on the south of Geneva northeast as far as Schaffhausen. The entire region covers more than ten per cent of all Switzerland. The present article will deal with Canton Neuchatel (also known as Neuenburg) and the Bernese Jura. One of the striking features of Switzerland is the great variety of scenery one meets in so short distances. The plains in the northeast, the valleys of the Rhine, the Aar and the Rhone, the lakes, the region of the Alps, and the region of the Jura are all different worlds, and yet are only a few hours apart. One can see all these different places of Swiss scenery in a single day.

It might be thought beforehand that all mountain scenery is alike or at least similar. But this is not true of the two great mountain systems here. The Jura Mountains are very strikingly different from the Alps. First of all they are comparatively low, the highest peak, Mont Tendre, being only 5,512 feet high, while the highest of the Swiss Alps, Mont Rosa, is 15,217 feet. The Jura has no eternal snow, neither has it the barren rocky regions like the Alps. All the Jura region is densely wooded, and this, in fact, is one of the characteristic features of this region. The very tops of the peaks and ridges are literally covered with a fresh and vigorous growth of shrubs and trees, for the most part pines and firs. The flora of this entire region is especially rich, and to a lover of the plant world is intensely fascinating.

The Jura region consists, for the most part, of limestone and is by reason of the consequent dryness poorly suited to agriculture. The most that can be realized from the higher portions is the rich pasture. The Alps on the one hand are grand, the Jura on the other artistic; the Alps are over-powering and majestic, the Jura pleasing and beautiful; the Alps are also fierce and mighty, the Jura mild and firm. In every case we find the Jura less intense and imposing than the Alps, but not less attractive.

Neuchatel

Canton Neuchatel (Neuenburg) is situated entirely in the Jura region, halfway between Geneva and Basel. It ranks fourteenth in size and has a population of 126,000. It is situated right on the boundary of France and as much of its surface slopes to the west as to the east, which again reminds us that the boundary of Switzerland is political, not natural or geographical. On the east side are Lake Neuchatel and Lake Biel, both beautiful in their location and attractive because of their clear blue waters. The language of the canton is French and the people more nearly resemble the French in manner and customs than do those of any other portion of Switzerland. The canton is renowned for its manufacture of watches, which alone employs 15,000 hands, one eighth of the canton's entire population. The manufacture of chocolate is also prominent. All the inhabitants except about 18,000 are Protestants of the Reformed Church. Just during the past summer the separation of church and state was effected. It will be of great interest to notice what the results of this separation will be. Here in Switzerland there are many who do not expect any good to come of it, while in the United States the sentiment would naturally be in favor of the separation.

The history of the canton is of great interest. In the days of the Helvetians the canton belonged to the territory of the Sequanians. Then it passed in turn to the Burgundians, the Franks, and the Prussians. In 1512 it was conquered by the Swiss cantons but after seventeen years fell back to Prussia. In 1806 it was given to Napoleon in exchange for Hanover and in 1815 was ceded to the Swiss Republic as the twenty-first member of the federation. But not till 1857 did all foreign claim upon it cease. Thus the canton can really be considered as the youngest in the family of twenty-two. At present one finds no traces of foreign affiliation and sympathy. The people are thoroughly Swiss and altogether loyal to their own flag.

For mildness of scenery this canton is unexcelled. On entering the Jura from Pontalier at Les Verrieres-Suisse on a summer evening, I was completely carried away by the first sight of the new scenes. No doubt there was some sentiment connected with this, the thought of the home of relatives and friends, the memory of fireside tales in childhood days, the anticipation of spending a year in this nation in study and travel, all this played its part. But aside from it all there is that in the scenery itself which produces these effects on any receptive mind. From Les Verrieres-Suisse the road leads through the Val de Travers, charmingly pleasing and beautiful, with the village Travers rebuilt since the destruction by fire in 1865, and nestled in on the hill-slope in almost poetic beauty and fancy. A little farther on is Neuchatel, the cantonal seat, a city of 23,000 inhabitants, built on the shores of the lake of the same name, and extending far up on the mountain side. We first saw this city by moonlight and afterwards often in daytime. It loses none of its charm as one becomes acquainted better with its sights. The castle of Neuchatel is one of the most artistic of the remnants of another age. A university is located here with faculties in law, theology, literature and science, conducted chiefly in the French language. That it is a great resort for tourists is evidenced by the numerous hotels overlooking the city and lake, many of them splendid works of art in their architecture and modern and elaborate in their equipment. The people have many French characteristics, besides their language and manner of dress. Neuchatel is in every way a delightful city to visit. Nothing expresses one's feeling on leaving it better than their own familiar phrase, "Au revoir".

A delightful ride to the mountain district over the Jura-Neuchatelois line takes one through the region of famous vineyards of this canton, not so large as those of Vaud and Wallis (also called Valais), but equal if not superior to them in every other respect. From the terrace at Chambrelieu one sees first the vineyards and the lake in the foreground, then the Swiss plateau and the lower Alps, and lastly the majestic summits of the snow capped Alps from Mont Blanc to the Saentis. A similar view of the Alps appears from the heights just back of Neuchatel. The view of the entire chain as seen at Chambrelieu is surpassed probably from only one other point, namely from the Weissenstein near Solothurn. On a clear evening the entire chain stands out in bold relief, from which one gets an excellent impression of the Alps as a unit. From Chambrelieu the road passes through the Val de Ruz, to me the most beautiful of all the valleys of Switzerland which I saw. It is not large, but has the beauty of a fine work of art. It appears level, only hollowed out in the middle, shaped like a large spoon. On every side there are low mountains. It is dotted with twenty-two agricultural and industrial villages, altogether of the French style.

Center of Watch Making

From here the train passes through two or three tunnels and with a single leap, as it were, lands in La Chaux de Fonds, a city of 40,000 inhabitants situated in the valley below. No other city of Switzerland is so distinctively French as this. A different atmosphere hovers over it. There is a different air about the people. La Chaux de Fonds is the center of watch manufacture. There are three hundred factories. It is said that the annual local exportation reaches $16,000,000, three fourths of the total production of Switzerland. The technical school for learning the watch-maker's trade is also located here. I watched with great interest the thousands of men and women coming out from these factories when the clock struck twelve at noon. They are very different from the shop men of some of our own railroad and machine shops. They are well dressed and clean in hand and face. They look cheerful and intelligent. The people of La Chaux de Fonds can be said to be beautiful. There seems to be nothing of the commonplace about them. I only regretted that I could not take time to study more carefully the social life of these intelligent looking watch-makers. Just a little beyond La Chaux de Fonds to the south is Le Locle, a bird's nest in the clover in its situation, and also a watch manufacturing village.

Father's Birthplace

My favorable impression of Canton Neuchatel may in part be due to prejudices of which I could not reasonably be expected to be free, for in this canton my father was born. Perhaps these impressions do not altogether belong to so general an article on Switzerland, yet I venture to tell the readers about my visit to my father's birthplace in the very northwest corner of the canton, four or five miles north of La Chaux de Fonds. It is sometimes said that children do not appreciate and respect and love and honor their parents as they should. To some extent this is only too true. But how can a son estimate his father rightly before he has himself become a father? How can a child understand old age before his own hairs turn gray? My father died eight years ago, and now without his knowing it, as one of his sons, in gratitude to his memory, I search out his birthplace four thousand miles away from my own. While this place to others is like any other, to me it has an element of sacredness, and on approaching it thoughts similar to those of Moses on his approach to the burning bush involuntarily suggested themselves. It may be a matter of indifference as to when and how the world came into existence. The fact remains, it now exists. So with our lives. Yet a better understanding of the Creator's ways of calling us into life, adds to our enjoyment and adoration of the Creator. And when we take a second thought we find that not only our life in all its manifoldness is wonderful, but as well the fact that we came into existence.

The northwest portion of Canton Neuchatel, the upper or higher portion, is called Vallanvron, of which a lower portion is called Bas des Brandt. In Vallanvron is the home of Henri Ummel, a Mennonite minister, who has converted his home into a "Pensionat", a delightful place to spend a quiet vacation, and much sought by people who desire rest. Nowhere did I spend a more restful day than here, made the more restful by the cheerful and congenial spirit of the father and "les quatre petites soeurs", as the daughters laughingly call themselves. I arrived at this home on Sunday evening, coming home from the church services in Chaux d' Abel, where David Ummel is the lovely aged pastor.

The Ancestral House

The night was soon past and the dawn of the next morning, August 12, was exceptionally clear. Not a cloud was to be seen, save over the deep chasm of the river Doubs which forms the boundary line between Switzerland and France. The road from Vallanvron to Bas des Brandt winds round and round among rocks and pine groves, slowly down through a long field. This large field, the farm with the farm house, the entire estate, is called Bas des Brandt, and was the birthplace of my father. On the meadows so splendidly kept stood the second crop of grass. To the left of the road was a patch of oats just beginning to ripen. In front stood the house. Now imagine, if you can, the feeling that dominated my soul! Here it stood a broad low building, after the characteristic style of the Jura region, the house built over a century ago, the home of my great-grandfather. The walls are of massive stone, at least a foot and a half thick. The wide tile roof on the north side is entirely covered with moss and looks old enough to be the original, while that on the south side is new. A family lives there now, but they know nothing of the earlier inhabitants, who lived there. Except for the court records kept at La Chaux de Fonds, I could not have found out for certain whether this is the place, and yet it is only seventy-two years since the family moved to America.

I was shown through every room of the large structure. There was the kitchen with the open fireplace and chimney, apparently unchanged. I seemed to hear the voice of an aged mother who managed to feed seven children as best she could after their father's death. It was in those days when her children were yet small and gathered about her knee around the open fireplace, when moral truths were implanted that have since become the rich heritage of entire families. "He who is not too good to take a pin, is not too good to steal a needle," is one of her precepts that resounded again and again in my childhood days through one of her sons. When I looked at the walls and the posts, at the stone floor and wooden ceiling, evidently the same as in the days when my father first saw the light, then I wanted to be left alone for meditation, for it is on such occasions that one's soul is stirred with deepest sentiments.

The march was continued through halls and rooms, down stairs and up stairs. I was not satisfied till I had seen it all. The middle front room upstairs is the work shop. And how nearly this found a duplicate over in Indiana is almost incredible! There was the same work bench, the same small wooden mall, the draw knife, the buck saw hanging on the wall, tools small and tools large, the very pattern of which was reproduced on another continent. More than this, on the wall was also a bunch of dried wormwood and tansy and camomile always seen in the work shop of my childhood. How true it is that we enter into other men's work! How much more true even than this is it that we enter into other men's ideas!

After the custom of the Jura region, as in fact of all rural Switzerland, the house and barn are both under the same roof. A door from the hallway leading from the kitchen opens at once to the hen-house, the calf-stable and the pig-pens. Beyond these is the stable for the cows and horses. Above these is the haymow and the granary. In the separation of house and barn, the American idea is certainly in every respect a long step in advance over the earlier idea of Switzerland. Just back of the house towards the west and less than fifty yards from it is the deep chasm of the river Doubs, a thousand feet or more below. The bank is rather steep and densely covered with shrubs and small trees. On the other side are the rocky cliffs of France. A large linden tree stands near the edge of the steep bank. In its shadow I found comfort and protection against the hot rays of the noonday sun.

Filial Meditations

As I looked over the ancestral home of Bas des Brandt, all by myself and left alone in the cool shade of the linden tree I found myself a-dreaming. The place, I said, remains but the actors have withdrawn from the stage. Strangers now occupy the house and till the soil. As I thought of my father once playing under this same linden tree with six brothers and sisters, and as I thought of grandparents whom I never met, all beyond this life now, then I silently thanked my God for ancestors whose faith in God and the right was firm and strong. Just across the river I noticed again the shores of another land -- France. This made me think of another world to which those have gone who gave me life and directed my childish steps and formed my first moral impressions. Then I sobbed and wept ~~aloud, not for sorrow, nor for joy, but as an expression of that longing of the soul for a better home. Not the~~ aloud, not for sorrow, nor yet for joy, but as an expression of that longing of the soul for a better home. Not the natural beauty of Switzerland, nor the wealth of America can satisfy these longings, but only the inward consciousness of being at peace with God. Suddenly I awoke from these meditations and became conscious of the thought that we cannot live in the past, but have it to do with the ever present and the future. Here is the line of duty. The problems of the present demand my energy and my best efforts, my first attention. God and the cause of right and truth are calling for every service I can render to the world. So I started on my way up the winding road with now and then a backward look on Bas des Brandt. Au revoir, I said, as the road made a turn behind dark pines, and then journeyed on.

Bernese Jura -- Mother's Home

Vallanvron borders on Canton Bern. No canton in Switzerland is more familiar to the readers of these articles than Canton Bern, and the part of the Jura region is perhaps the best known of all. This is the home of the Sprunger's, the Amstutz's, the Lehman's and other families largely represented in our country. Frequent excursions to this region have endeared it to me. There is a certain uniformity in the entire Jura system, far more so than in the Alps. Yet it loses none of its freshness and constant surprise for the visitor. The Münsterberg and Sonnenberg, the St. Imer valley, Delemont and Delle, are among the familiar places here, all of which deserve extended mention if space would permit. The entrance from the south is at Biel. From here the road winds in and out and up and down to Sonceboz, where it divides, one line going through St. Imer to La Chaux de Fonds, the other through Moutier and Delemont to Basel. At Delemont it divides again and one line goes over Delle to Belfort or to Montbeliard. The latter line I followed on my way to my mother's birthplace at St. Valbert near Hericourt, some distance beyond the Swiss boundary. By means of the court records the home was easily identified beyond any doubt. The house is still standing and is occupied by distant relatives. The impressions of this visit were so similar to those at my father's home that they need not be repeated here. On the return from here after a few days visit, I followed the mountain road from Delle over Glovelier and Seignelegier to La Chaux de Fonds, a most pleasing mountain route. In this way I saw all the Bernese-Jura region along the railroads. So delightful and pleasing are the scenes in every part that one does not grow weary of them even after repeated visits. For abundance of wealth one would not seek this region, but for natural beauty it is not easily excelled.

THE (III)PHILIP HIRSCHY HOUSE

Photograph No.

This is the original house built by (III)Philip Hirschy in 1848 on his farm in Wabash Township, Adams County, Indiana, one mile south of the town of Berne. It was built of the materials at hand. The manner of construction and the plan of the house are of considerable interest to us today.

The cellar walls were of white oak logs squared with the adz on three sides. The side left round was turned toward the outside. This was the foundation. The rest of the house was built of logs cut flat on two sides so that one flat side was on the inside of the house and the other on the outside. The remaining two sides were left round which allowed chinks or openings to be between the logs which were plastered shut with a mortar made by mixing straw and chaff with clay. The inside of the house was then whitewashed and had the same appearance as the whitewashed wall of the porch as seen in the picture.

About two years later Mr. Hirschy hauled the weatherboards or siding from a sawmill located near the Wabash River near the little village of Vera Cruz (then called Neuville) several miles distant.

The window and door casings and even the doors themselves were made of boards split from logs and dressed by hand with the adz and plane. The roof was made of three foot long clapboards split from red oak. This roof shed rain well but in winter when the wind blew hard snow would be found sometimes on the bed quilts in the morning. Many years later the clapboards were replaced with shingles made by Isaac Moser who split them from white or red oak.

The chimney was built up the outside of the north wall. It was of straw and clay mortar with sticks of wood placed in it in irregular positions to strengthen it. Years later this was torn down and a brick chimney, built up from the cellar floor on the inside of the house, took its place as can be seen in the picture. An open fireplace was used with both chimneys. The open fire was used for cooking and heating. Several years after the house was built a stove was put in the sitting room. The fire place had a small hinged crane on each side from which kettles could be hung and thus swung over the fire. The floor in front of the brick fireplace was bricked for some distance flush with the board floor. The floors were of white oak boards split from perfect logs and planed by hand.

The house was 18 feet by 28 feet. It had two rooms downstairs and two upstairs. The rooms were formed by partitions of walnut boards. In the picture through the lower white-curtained window we are looking into the sitting room. The other end of the house was the kitchen, which also served as the dining room. The inclosed stairway leading to the second floor was in the sitting room alongside the walnut board partition. On the second floor the stairway was open but had a railing along one end and the side away from the partition.

Other things of interest are the stair-like frame for flower pots and the bench beyond it on the porch and the bench in front of the house. These are the handiwork of (III)Philip Hirschy. He did all the woodworking and carpenter work on the house with his own hands. This is all the more remarkable when we consider that he was only 24 years of age. Near the dinnerbell post planted in a large jar is the treasured bay plant from which leaves were taken to flavor meats and soups. At the right is the garden fence built of staves. In the extreme background can be seen faintly a rail fence. In the summer-time meals were often eaten on the porch. In the winter the back part of the porch which was inclosed on three sides was filled with firewood.

This old house was torn down about 1890-1892. The work was done mostly by (IV)Elias and (IV)Joel, sons of (III)Philip Hirschy. The locust tree in front of the house still stood for many years after the house was gone but is not there now.

The point of greatest interest in this photograph is, of course, (III)Philip Hirschy and his wife Mary. You see them here wearing the dress favored by the Defenseless Mennonite Church to which they belonged. The men of this church wore their hair rather long and allowed their beards to grow but shaved the upper lip. The women at all times wore a covering on the head. (III)Philip Hirschy was a man of rugged physical strength. He was about 70 years of age when this photograph was taken. Note the kindly face of Mrs. Hirschy. Their sons still living speak of their father and mother with the greatest reverence. More is said about (III)Mr. and Mrs. Philip Hirschy in another part of this book.

-----Told by (IV)Joel Hirschy to (V)Walter Hirschy.

Supplement to

THE (III)PHILIP HIRSCHY HOUSE

This house was the birthplace of C(IV)John J. Hirschy, C(IV)Jacob Hirschy, C(IV)David Hirschy, C(IV)Lydia Hirschy (Wurthner), C(IV)Elias Hirschy, C(IV)Joel Hirschy, C(IV)Christian P. Hirschy and C(IV)Noah Calvin Hirschy. The last one named recorded the beginnings of this Family History. Located a few feet east of the old house, a new large frame house was finished in 1870(?) and that same year became the birthplace of (III)Philip Hirschy's youngest son, C(IV)Amos Hirschy. The new house is shown in Photographs No. and No. . The old house from then on was used as a kind of kitchen and eating place during the summer and as a place for general storage.

THE C(IV)DAVID HIRSCHY LOG BARN

Photograph No.

The log barn in this picture was built in 1883 or 1884 on the C(IV)David Hirschy farm which was a piece of almost 80 acres taken from the northeast corner of the original (III)Philip Hirschy farm one mile south of Berne, Indiana. Mrs. David Hirschy still lives there with her son C(V)Rufus Hirschy.

This picture was taken in the early spring as can be seen from the cornstalks which litter the barn-yard from the winter feeding and from the fact that the boys in the foreground are wearing their caps and coats. Also there are no leaves on the plum trees between us and the chicken house at the right. The cornstalks will be hauled out upon the fields for fertilizer.

The barn is built in the usual manner for log construction. Note how the logs are fitted at the corners of the building. The lower part of the barn is the stable for cows and horses and has the chinks between the logs closed with smaller pieces of wood and the usual mortar of clay and straw. In the upper part the chinks are left open, especially on the south side of the building. This admits some light to the hay loft. The roof is of clapboards split from short logs. Sheds on the west and north sides were added later.

Wood was cheap material then and was used for many things. The barn-yard fences are of boards. To the right of the girl is a water trough made by hollowing out a log. From the small gate a walk of planks leads to the house. Under the overhanging roof about two feet from the ground is a feed trough of heavy boards for feeding grain. Perhaps a piece of rock salt is kept here. The square opening to which the upright ladder leads is the way to the hay loft.

The picture was taken a short time before the barn was torn down in 1900. A large frame barn was built on near the same site that year. This is there today.

The boy at the left is C(V)Rufus Hirschy and the other one is C(V)Menno S. Hirschy and the girl is C(V)Emma C. Hirschy (now Mrs. L. F. Lehman). These are the living children of C(IV)David Hirschy. In this photograph Rufus is 16 years of age, Menno 14, and Emma 11.

A GENEALOGICAL REGISTER of the
HIRSCHY FAMILY
Covering Seven Generations

Plan of the Book

The first generation is designated by the Roman numeral, (I), placed in front of the name. The only name in the first generation is (I)Johannes Ullrich Hirschi, with whom this history begins. The second generation has the Roman numeral, (II), in front of the names; the third generation, (III); the fourth generation, (IV); and so on through all succeeding generations.

However, in the fourth generation we already have seventy-five names. Therefore, to avoid confusion, the capital letter, A, is placed in front of the Roman numerals and names of all descendants of (III)John Hirschy; the letter, B, is used for the descendants of (III)Anna Hirschy; C for descendants of (III)Philip Hirschy; D for descendants of (III)Lewis Hirschy; E for descendants of (III)Marianna Hirschy; F for descendants of (III)Maria Hirschy; G for descendants of (III)Rosina Hirschy.

When you get lost in tracing relationship, consult the outline chart in the envelop in the back of this book.

Druck und Verlag von V. Kastner, Columbus, Ohio.

Note: Five verses of conventional poetry follow and the quotation of St. Mathew 28. 19,20.

The underlined words in the certificate were written in. Some of the blank spaces were not filled in. The date of the baptism is missing.

First Poem:

Ich bin getauft, ich steh im Bunde,
Durch meine Tauf mit meinem Gott!
So sprech ich stets mit frohem Munde,
In Kreuz, in Trübsal, Angst und Noth.
Ich bin getauft, des Kreuz' ich mich,
Die Freude bleibt mir ewiglich.

Ich bin getauft in deinem Namen,
Gott Vater, Sohn und Heiliger Geist!
Ich bin gesellt zu deinem Samen,
Zum Volk, das dir geheiligt heisst,
O! welch ein Glück ward dadurch mein,
Herr, laß mich dessen würdig seyn!

Ich bin getauft, ob ich gleich sterbe,
Was schadet mir das kühle Grab?
Ich weiss mein Vaterland und Erbe,
Das ich bey Gott im Himmel hab':
Nach meinem Tod ist mir bereit,
Des Himmels Freud' und Feyer-Kleid.

Second poem:

Dasz ich in deiner Christenheit,
Mein Gott! geboren bin,
Dir durch die Taufe früh geweiht,
Wie sehr ist mir's Gewinn.

Wie, dank ich dir, Allgütiger!
Für diese Vatertrau!
Gieb, dasz dir immer inniger
Mein Herz ergeben sey.

Translation of the Poems from the Birth and Baptism Certificate in German Certifying to the Birth and Baptism of (III) Anna Hirschy. Certificate is in possession of Mrs. H. C. Cross, Elise, N.Y.

First Poem:

I am baptised, I am in the Covenant,
Through my baptism, with my God!
So speak I ever with joyful word,
In cross, in tribulation, anxiety and need,
I am baptised, in which I rejoice,
The joy will abide with me eternally.

I am baptised in Thy name,
God Father, Son and Holy Spirit!
I am counted among Thy seed,
Among the people consecrated to Thee,
Oh! what joy is mine through this,
Lord, let me be worthy of it.

I am baptised, though I die,
What harm can the cool grave do me?
I know my Fatherland and inheritance,
I have with God in heaven:
At my death there is prepared for me,
Heaven's joy and festive-robe.

Second Poem:

How great is my gain,
My God! that I am born
Into Thy Christianity,
Through baptism early consecrated to Thee.

How I thank Thee, All-Good-One!
For this loyalty of a father!
Grant, that always within me
My heart may be devoted to Thee.
